

FAITH TOGETHER FOR CARE

What We Owe To One Another, Matters

As people of faith, we pray in gratitude for all that we have, acknowledging that all we claim as our own has been given as Grace.

As people of faith, we pray that respect for the common good include the needs of those who struggle in society; because

What we owe to one another, matters.

As people of faith, we pray for health care policy that protects all human life and dignity; because

What we owe to one another, matters.

As people of faith, we pray that modification to Medicaid will prioritize access to care for people in need; because

What we owe to one another, matters.

As people of faith, we pray with our nation and legislators as we wrestle with health care legislation, that the poor are not left lacking; because

What we owe to one another, matters.

As people of faith, we pray in solidarity with all New Yorkers who know both the benefits and the costs of inclusive health care; because

What we owe to one another, matters.

As people of faith, we pray with hope that we who have been given so much, including comprehensive, quality health care, recognize that right for other people:

Especially, for the poor, the elderly, the challenged, the marginalized, those who cannot care for themselves, all who are our brothers and sisters; because

What we owe to one another, matters.
